Shippen was born in Philadelphia, the son of merchant Edward Shippen III. He learned law from Tench Francis, the attorney general of Pennsylvania. He married the daughter of his mentor, Margaret Francis, in 1753, with whom he had nine children. In 1748 he went to London to complete his law studies at the Middle Temple, and, after returning to Philadelphia, was admitted to the Bar. He was appointed judge of the Admiralty Court in 1755. Three years later he was elected a member of the city council. In 1762 he was appointed protonary of the Supreme Court, a position he held until the Revolution. He became a member of the Pennsylvania Provincial Council in 1770. Shippen tried to remain neutral in the American Revolution, hoping that the colonies and the motherland would be reconciled. He did not support the extension of royal authority and, therefore, was not loyal, but he also opposed the radically democratic Pennsylvania Constitution of 1776, which sought to reduce the government's control of powerful families like the Shippens[1]. In 1790 he received an honorary title of LL.D. from the University of Pennsylvania, of which he was a trustee from 1791 until his death. He was also a member of the American Philosophical Society. In 1791, he was appointed a member of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, serving with Jasper Yeates and Edward Burd, both relatives and former students. Shippen became president of the Supreme Court in 1799, but in 1804 he was dismissed for flimsy political reasons. The next year, the Pennsylvania Senate acquitted him and his associates. Shippen retired to private life and Little after April 15, 1806 in Philadelphia at the age of 77 years. His fourth quarter Margaret Shippen, fue la segunda esposa de Benedict Arnold.
